EDITOR'S NOTE

Super Figures and Super Saiyans!

We are bursting at the seams with cool info! For those of you who collect the DBZ action figures, we have a real treat in store for you. This issue marks the first monthly installment of our new Dragon Ball action figure column called Fantastic Plastic, see page 6. Dan Hancock, who's our DBZ action figure expert and co-Webmaster of dragonballtoys.com Web site, gives us some interesting insight into the world of Dragon Ball toys! It's worth reading if you're an action figure fan.

And, if that's not enough, he's also included a great action figure feature called Double Takes. This article introduces us to the world of Dragon Ball Z action figure variations. Some of these unusual figures could be sitting in your collection right now! Turn to page 29 to learn more about them.

Okay DBZ fans, you've been asking for more coverage of the Super Saiyans. You wanted us to include everything there is on those powerful guys. Well, inside this issue we've done it! DBZ character expert, Greg Werner, gives us a complete review on every Super Saiyan character ever mentioned in the series'. Did you know that there are more than four different types of Super Saiyan? Oh yeah! Check out the details beginning on page 16.

Back in 1992, Bandai released a hand-held video game in Japan called Super Barcode Wars. The game was played using special DBZ trading cards. The object of the game was to battle players by swiping your DBZ cards through the game's system. The player with the most powers won! On page 50 we'll show you what the cards looked like and on page 28 you have a chance to win the entire card set with the video game system!

Plus, there's even more cool DBZ stuff inside this issue waiting for you to explore! After you've read through every page, don't forget to grade this month's Cooler cover in our Super Saiyan Survey on page 72.

Fantastic Plastic

Irwin Toy Refines Their Painting Process

Welcome to the first installment of Fantastic Plastic. This column will deal with all kinds of Dragon Ball toy-related issues, and we hope it helps everyone to have a better understanding of the action figure market.

As of this writing, Dragon Ball Z has one, possibly two more seasons of new episodes on Cartoon Network, after which they will probably spend some time replaying the series in its entirety. After this, there will probably be two seasons of Dragon Ball GT. Concurrently, there are also at least four or five seasons worth of Dragon Ball still on the horizon, so there is plenty of TV support for at least another three years of toys.

IRWIN TOY ORIGINALS

Irwin Toy has been producing "original" Dragon Ball toys for North America for roughly two years now, and it's amazing how far they have come in that short time. Of course, their first original line was a huge success. There are a couple of reasons for this, including great packaging, and more articulation than previous figures. However, the greatest reason for the instant success of this line was the fact that it included characters such as Bulma, Master Roshi, Nappa, and other characters that neither AB nor Bandai had ever made into toys. With every new series, Irwin has endeavored to give DBZ fans the figures of characters that have never been made before by anyone, and this is a large factor in their success. Not only are they addressing glaring omissions in the Bandai and AB lines of important main characters, but they are also giving fans some more obscure characters, such as Garlic Jr., Yajirobe, and Pui Pui (coming in Series 9), to help fill out both displays and play-battles. This, in my opinion, is the best thing about Irwin's new line—you may see 50 different versions of Goku ("Scuba Goku" is the one I'm waiting for), but the secondary characters are getting attention as well.

Irwin has also come a long way with its paint and sculpting, though they do have a bit farther to go. The first three series of figures which had a semi-glossy finish, also looked nice and line. To meet the challenge, Irwin attempted to give Series 6 a lived-in look by giving the figures color-washes to increase the paint detail. Unfortunately, this sort of backfired—while the effect was, in general, a good one (the figures looked much more detailed and real, like they had just come from battle with dirt under their fingernails and on their clothes), it resulted in large amounts of extra paint on the figures. Colors from one area run into others, while some of the color just looks like they splattered the figures with paint at random. What this means is that some fig-clean with lots of shine everywhere. The first series of Blasting Figures had an extremely high-gloss finish, to the point where it appeared that Gohan and Krillin had jumped into a vat of shellac before going to battle.

Then they went the other way with Series 4 and 5, which are still the best-looking sets in my opinion. The paint they used for these figures has a flat finish, which looks much better on clothes and flesh than the glossy paint. Also, the paint jobs were extremely clean—the whole line looked wonderful.

HIGHER QUALITY FIGURES

Then, the IF Labs figures were announced. These new figures, which were "McFarlanesque" (an adjective which has become an industry standard referring to the amount of detail in all McFarlane toys) in both sculpt and paint job, raised the bar for Irwin's five-inch ures look much better than others, and it becomes necessary to search the racks for the best-looking figure, rather than just grabbing one in the assumption that they're all the same.

Irwin has addressed this problem with the latest set to be released, Series 7. The paint jobs on these figures are similar to those of Series 6, but they are much cleaner, in terms of keeping colors separated. The details are much crisper, which leads one to believe that they have gone a long way towards refining their process.

If the manufactured (as in machine-painted) figures on display at Toy Fair were any indication, Irwin will have the process completely polished for Series 8. From there, it's anyone's guess as to what innovations new sets will bring, but if the current trends are any indication, whatever they do will be wonderful. In the next three years, we have a lot to look forward to from IF Labs, Irwin Toy, and Dragon Ball Z. ★

The Good, The Bad & the

What would Dragon Ball Z be without its line-up of intense characters? The series' backbone lies within each character's individual personas, not to mention their personal strengths and weaknesses. Each character has a distinct personality, and after watching the show for a while, you'll come to know the character, as you would a close friend... or perhaps an enemy. Which is why, in this section, we will tell you a little bit about each character so you can get to know them even better than you already do.

The Dynamic Duo

Goten

Born in 767 A.D. just before the Artificial Humans and Cell show up, Goten is the second son born to Chi Chi and Goku. Goten grew up never knowing his father, but with Chi Chi's eyes and Goku's hair, he grew up to be much like his father, happy and care-free. Unlike Gohan who at the age of four was fighting for his life in the wilderness, Goten spends his seven years of life before we meet him at home with Chi Chi and Gohan. Chi Chi trains the boy so that he can at least fight and during training, discovers that he can actually become a Super Saiyan, (but Chi Chi just thinks he's become a punk and dyed his hair).

Goten participates in the 25th Tenkaichi Budoukai Children's Division and fights against Trunks in the final bout. He loses this battle because of a ring-out but he also breaks the agreed "No Super Saiyan" rule that adult Saiyans came up with. During this battle he shows two of his signature attacks: Totsugeki, (which literally means "Charge!") and Kame Kame Ha, which is of course his mispronunciation of Kamehameha.

The similarities between him and Goku as a child are stunning, and not only in appearance. Both are very naïve of the real world, and completely pure. Goten plays the straightedge in his friendship with Trunks. Goten is always the hesitant one, while Trunks is a live wire willing to do anything for fun. Later in Dragon Ball GT, Goten is frequently seen with his girlfriend Paris.

Chibi Trunks

Chibi Trunks is just like Trunks, except he's not from the future, and about eleven years younger...and doesn't have a sword....and isn't nearly as polite...okay okay, so they're entirely different people, but why shouldn't they be? Akira Toriyama has even said that he purposely made them very different because of the different scenarios they grow up in. Chibi Trunks grows up as the spoiled grandchild of the owner of one of the richest and successful inventors in the world. The world is his playground, and there isn't anything he can't buy. Compare that to Future Trunks being raised by a widowed mother in a world without hope, where every day could be your last. Depressing stuff huh?

Trunks is an out-going character, who isn't bashful. Trunks is willing to do whatever it takes to accomplish his goal, even if it's faking an identity to fight in the Adult's Division of the Tenkaichi Budoukai. Trunks is slightly stronger than Goten, and has to lower his ki in order to fuse with Goten. Some people think Trunks is the dominant personality of Gotenks, but Fusion Characters generally have a personality that is neither user.

In Dragon Ball GT Trunks is one of the main characters, and travels around the universe with Goku and Pan. At this time he's also the owner of the Capsule Corporation. Before leaving on the adventure, he is forced to work in the office, but he'd rather just fly around and be free. Trunks changes personalities a bit as well. During GT he acts more proper like Future Trunks, perhaps a result of him maturing, or his responsibility with work. But when it comes down to it, Future, Chibi or whatever, Trunks still tears it up when he has to.

ER SAIYAN GUIDE!

You asked for it, and now you've got it. One of the most debated topics in the pages of this magazine, on the Internet and among friends is Super-Saiyans. And because of this topic, friends have become enemies, brothers have turned against each other and girls have hated men for never having seen a female Super-Saiyan. Hmmm....okay maybe not (?) But to be sure the topic of Super-Saiyan is indeed furiously debated. Hopefully this guide will provide all the information for you and you can reach your own conclusion. We will try to keep our opinions out of this guide, and should any sneak in here, we'll be sure to let you know when they do. All of the information you see here will be directly from the Japanese version, as even fans that watch American DBZ hold the facts from Japanese DBZ to be true. Are you ready? Here we go!

"A Super what that surpasses a Super which now?" - Babidi

Saiyan is the English translation of the Japanese word Saiya-jin. (Psy-yah-jeen). The Japanese symbol for Jin literally means "person". When used without a country's name or before it, it usually means person, but when added at the end of a country's name, it creates a nationality. For example, in Japanese Americans are called America-jin, or "America Person". Thus being of the Saiya race, Saiyans is the American equivalent to saying Saiya-jin. You may notice that this refers to a country. This poses grounds for an argument that the name of the country Saiyans come from is Saiya. However, there is no other evidence to support that. If you were to refer to the Saiyans prior to their takeover of the Tuffles (Tsfuru-jin), both they and the Tuffles would be known as Plant-jin. At that time, the name of the planet was Plant. The name of a planet followed by Jin creates an entire planet's population name. Example:

We are all known as Earthlings. In Japanese we are all known as "Chikyuu-jin" or "Earth People". After the Saiyans successfully defeated the Tuffles, they renamed the planet Vegeta. At that moment, all people living on the planet became Vegeta-jin, or Vegetans perhaps. So, pulling it all together, when a character is a Super Saiya-jin they are literally a "Super Saiya Person".

Legend of the Super Saiyan

This is where a great conflict between anime and manga exists. In the anime, Vegeta states that only 1 in every 1,000 Saiyans is born a Legendary Super-Saiyan. In the manga, Vegeta states that once every 1,000 years a Super-Saiyan is born. It's not a difficult choice which one you need to trust. Believe the manga when it comes to pure facts. So, does this mean that most of the Saiyans are just incredibly lucky?? No, of course not. A myth is a myth. Myths and Legends were made to entertain and explain certain inexplicable events. Now, I promised we wouldn't place opinions here, so at this point, I'm going to split our route. It's going to get a bit bumpy so stick with me. A huge plot difference exists in the anime that validates events in Dragon Ball GT, but destroys DBZ. I will try to explain it from all sides. (You'll see why anime and manga must be considered two separate stories).

Anime: When Vegeta talks about the Legendary Super Saiya-jin, we see a shadow of a Great Monkey. This is the Golden Monkey form seen in Dragon Ball GT. This was the form of Super-Saiyan held by the Legendary Super-Saiyan. This form of Super Saiya-jin can be attained two ways, by absorbing an enormous, (far more than are given off by any moon, they must come from a planet), amount of Brute Waves, or by having a tail and meeting the standard requirements for Super-Saiyan. (More on those later). This said, the makes them hate. For Vegeta, he had to redirect his anger to himself for being weak, not at Goku for being stronger. The no tail rule was briefly discussed before. In the anime it's clear that having a tail results in the Golden Monkey. While never clearly defined in the manga.....OPINION:....if one so desires they may assume that having a tail will result in the character turning into a Golden Monkey.

Super-Saiyan Forms

Now to the meat and potatoes of this guide. The actual Super Saiyan Forms. This will be divided into three different sections. Manga Super-Saiyan Forms, Anime Super-Saiyan Forms and Movie Super-Saiyan Forms.

Manga Super-Saiyan Forms:

These are forms of Super Saiyan that are described and exist only in the original manga.

SUPER-SAIYAN (1):

First Appearance:

Manga: Issue 317

Manga Volume: 27 Page 65

Japanese Episode: 95

Airdate: June 12th 1991

First Character Seen in This Form: Goku

Characters Who Have Attained This Form:

- Goku
- Gohan
- Goten
- Vegeta
- Future Trunks
- Trunks
- Gotenks
- Vegitto
- Broly (Movies only!)

Legendary Super-Saiyan was either a fake, and simply absorbed that astronomical amount of Brute Waves or he actually was born with the requirements for Super-Saiyan.

Manga: No form of the Legendary Super-Saiyan is seen. This is very difficult when combined with the anime. Does having a tail affect how a Super-Saiyan looks at all? (Yes) It was said that the golden hair, and emerald green eyes was merely the result of not having a tail when turning Super-Saiyan. Can this be trusted? (Again, yes) OPINION: If you're going to be a manga purist, there is no Golden Monkey. The only form of Super-Saiyan is that with golden hair and light green eyes. And that is what the original Legendary Super-Saiyan was.

However, if you hold this true, then you must turn your back completely on the DBZ anime and on Dragon Ball GT.

So you want to be a Super-Saiyan?

What do you need in order to become a golden-haired emerald green-eyed Super-Saiyan? Well essentially there are three main requirements that need to be met.

- A minimum power level of 300,000
- A quiet, pure and calm heart
- Extreme rage
- No Tail

The power level, although not set as the exact minimum power level, is what Goku's power level was when he was fighting Frieza without the Gravity Kaioken techniques. As such this is defined as the minimum power level. Like Frieza's transformations, such is the Super-Saiyan form. The body of the Saiyan can only hold so much power in it's normal form, hence the upgrade to Super-Saiyan physically changes the Saiyan's body and allows them to possess a greater power. (This is true for each level of Super-Saiyan as well). Having a quiet, calm and pure heart is a simple task. Mainly because it doesn't matter if you're pure good or pure evil, as exemplified by Vegeta. Extreme rage is a challenge actually. It can't be flat out anger. One must do a bit of soul searching to find what truly Goku reached the first stage of Super-Saiyan in the Frieza saga after Frieza killed Krillin. That was the event that created the rage within Goku completing his requirements to become a Super-Saiyan. This form of Super-Saiyan is only slightly distinguishable from Super-Saiyan 2 by the golden hair that usually exists in a few large tufts. In this form, a Saiyan's battle potential is increased 50 times. This form allows a Saiyan to increase their fighting potential beyond the limits of their normal body structure. However, this form uses up energy and will drain the user of energy faster than if they fought as normal Saiyans.

Stage 2 Super-Saiyan (Commonly Ultimate Super-Saiyan)

- First Appearance:
- Manga: Issue 377
- Manga Volume: 32 Page 60
- Japanese Episode: 155
- Airdate: September 2nd 1992

First Character Seen in This Form: Vegeta
Characters Who Have Attained This Form:

- Goku
- Future Trunks
- Vegeta

This form of Super-Saiyan is somewhere in-between Super Saiyan and Super Saiyan 2. The users' body mass increases, which causes their fighting potential to also increase, however, the ratio of muscle to the body is unbalanced. As such, a Saiyan in this form is slowed down somewhat and this form is not effective.

Stage 3 Super-Saiyan (Commonly (True) Ultimate Super-Saiyan 2)

First Appearance:

- Manga: Issue 385
- Manga Volume: 32 Page 175
- Japanese Episode: 162

First Character Seen in This Form: Future Trunks

Characters Who Have Attained This Form:

- Goku
- Future Trunks

This is a step beyond Stage 2 Super-Saiyan. (Think of this as Super Saiyan 1.8 if you will) This form boasts massively increased muscle, which, as expected, makes the Saiyan even stronger. However, the Saiyan's speed is also massively decreased. This is an extremely un-effective form of Super-Saiyan and is only used once in a real battle by Future Trunks against Perfect Cell.

Super-Saiyan 2 (Super-Saiyan beyond Super-Saiyan):

First Appearance:

- Manga: Issue 408
- Manga Volume: 34 Page 168

Japanese Episode: 184 (Previously attained, but seen first here)

Airdate: May 12th 1993

First Character Seen in This Form: Gohan

Characters Who Have Attained This Form:

- Goku
- Gohan
- Evil Prince Vegeta
- Gotenks

First achieved by Gohan when fighting Perfect Cell. This form is very difficult to distinguish from Super-Saiyan but not impossible. Super-Saiyan 2's hair tends to exist in multiple spiky tufts, as opposed to Super-Saiyan's few smooth tufts. This is the first form of Super-Saiyan reached after Super-Saiyan (1) that is very useful. The user's strength increases, but muscle mass doesn't increase, thereby granting the user the same speed they would normally have and actually increasing it.

SUPER-SAIYAN 3:

- First Appearance:
- Manga: Issue 474
- Manga Volume: 40 Page 25
- Japanese Episode: 245
- Airdate: November 9th 1994
- First Character Seen in This Form: Goku
- Characters Who Have Attained This Form:
- Goku
- Gotenks

The most powerful form of Super-Saiyan seen in Dragon Ball Z. This is extremely distinguishable from other forms by its incredibly long golden hair, extension of the brow and complete lack of eyebrows. Goku first showed off this form when he battled Fat Buu. Although Goku could have beaten Buu with his power at that time, he didn't so that the others could defeat

Buu on their own. The full-power version of this form is supposedly powerful enough to defeat Kid Buu, however, this full power Super-Saiyan 3 is never reached as Goku runs out of energy before he reaches it.

Anime Super Saiyan Forms

These are forms of Super-Saiyan that exist according to only the anime and Dragon Ball GT. The other forms of Super-Saiyan mentioned in the Manga Forms also exist here.

First seen as a shadowy figure during a monologue from Vegeta, this is first clearly seen in Dragon Ball GT when Goku actually becomes this form. Goku had to have his tail restored in order to reach this form. In this form of Super-Saiyan, the user will lose all sense of reason, and desire only destruction. However, should the user retain their human side, they will reach the most powerful level of Super-Saiyan in the animated series...

SUPER-SAIYAN 4:

- First Appearance:
- Manga: No GT Manga
- Manga Volume: No GT Manga Volume
- Japanese Episode: 35
- Airdate: January 29th 1997

First Character Seen in This Form: Goku

Characters Who Have Attained This Form

- Goku
- Vegeta
- Gogeta

Only seen in Dragon Ball GT, this is a very complicated form of Super-Saiyan. It is not even technically Super-Saiyan 4. Rather this is actually what could be called Legendary (True) Super-Saiyan 2. This does not follow Super-Saiyan 3. Instead it follows Legendary Super-Saiyan, (once again, the real Super-Saiyan form according to the anime). This form even looks drastically different from "normal" Super-Saiyan forms. Instead of being golden, the user's hair is black and increases in size, but does not stand up on end. The Saiyan's body is covered in a reddish hair and their eyes are outlined in red. An interesting fact, despite the fact that Goku is a child in GT, when he turns Super-Saiyan 4, he becomes an adult while he is in that state. Super Gogeta who is perhaps the strongest good fighter in the entire series lasts in this mode for 600 seconds (10 minutes) before splitting because Goku runs out of energy. Super-Saiyan 4 will increase the user's fighting potential by approximately 10 times.

MOVIE SUPER-SAIYAN FORMS

These are forms of Super-Saiyan that only exist in the movie world of Dragon Ball Z. They do not exist in the anime or story line.

FALSE SUPER SAIYAN:

First Appearance:

Japanese DBZ Movie 4 "Super Saiya-jin Son Gokou"

Original Release Date: March 19th 1991

First Character Seen in This Form: Goku

Characters Who Have Attained This Form
Goku

This is a form of Super-Saiyan that isn't Super-Saiyan and isn't a normal Saiyan state either. Only seen once in Dragon Ball Z Movie 4, this was basically Super-Saiyan 1/2. It's not as powerful as Super-Saiyan, and Goku barely changes physically. However, it is stronger than Kaioken.

LEGENDARY SUPER-SAIYAN:

First Appearance:

Japanese DBZ Movie 8 "Burn up!! Valiant Fight! Violent Fight! Super Exciting Fight!"
Release: March 6th 1993

First Character Seen in This Form: Broly

Characters Have Attained This Form
Broly

This is "supposedly" the real form of the Legendary Super-Saiyan, (but was obviously not). In this form, Broly is literally a bloodthirsty monster that will not hesitate to murder his father, (and he doesn't).

Broly's muscle mass (body) increases to disgusting proportions during this form and looks like the size of a tank with arms. Because of his ki, his hair also appears to be a greenish-yellowish color.

Downsides of Super-Saiyan

As powerful as Super-Saiyan may be, it doesn't come without a few qualifiers. While in Super-Saiyan form, a Saiyan must be reminded of hate. As such, Goku is unable to form a Spirit Bomb while he is a Super Saiyan. However, this does not mean he cannot become a Super-Saiyan after he creates a Spirit Bomb. Also, briefly mentioned before, a Super-Saiyan uses up a fighter's energy faster than fighting normally would. This is why it's advantageous for Gohan when he receives Elder Kaio's magical upgrade. He has the ability to use great amounts of power without turning Super-Saiyan, thus greatly increase how long he can fight.

The Women! What About the Women?

What better way to cap this guide off with a tribute to the unsung hero of Dragon Ball GT, Pan. Never has a Super-Saiyan woman been seen. Does this mean it is impossible for a female to turn Super-Saiyan? Certainly not. In fact, it was inferred in the Dragon Ball GT Perfect File. It's suggested that if Pan did become a Super Saiyan, she may indeed become a new type of Super-Saiyan never seen before. So why don't we see a female Super-Saiyan? Because Pan never fully met the requirements. Pan never became rage filled. Many times we've seen Pan become emotional, but never as mad as the males in Dragon Ball. Don't see this as sexist, just a sign that Pan can actually deal with difficult events better than most males can.

In Conclusion

We hope this guide clears a lot of your questions up at the very least, or better, settles a bitter dispute. As always, please let us know what you think of this! I'd like to acknowledge the following people for aiding in translations that were necessary for the writing of this guide: Yu Nakagawa and Tamiko Yamamoto. Thank you both very much for your help! ★

DOUBLE TAKES

VARIANTS AND EXCLUSIVES IN DRAGON BALL Z TOYS

Variants and exclusives have been a part of Dragon Ball Z toys as long as they've been produced. Bandai released all kinds of variants and exclusives in Japan, including the elusive Super Battle Collection Movie 7 three-pack and other Animation Festival Exclusives. The most accessible Bandai variants, for American collectors, are the Super Saiyan figures from the Dragon Ball Z portion of the Super Battle Collection, all of which originally came with yellow hair, and were re-released with gold hair.

Before they began releasing their own figures, Irwin Toy released both the gold-haired and the yellow-haired versions of the Super Saiyan figures, mentioned above. For the most part, they were released in different series, but the end result was still two different versions of the same figure that were made available to American collectors. Furthermore, a few gold-haired figures were (unintentionally on Irwin's part) released in series that were supposed to include yellow-haired figures, and vice-versa. While some of these are more rare than others, it is extremely hard to track their value simply because they were so random.

Two Separate Lines

When Irwin Toy started producing their own figures, they created two separate lines for mainstream and specialty shops. The standard versions of each figure came in packages with the regular DBZ logo and a picture of Goku on the blister by the character's name. The specialty packaging, on the other hand, features a stylized silver Dragon Ball Z logo, and an image of Super Saiyan Goku on the blister. The specialty packages are generally the more rare and more expensive of the two.

Packaging Variants

While they had the packaging variants worked out from the start, there was some difficulty when it came to exclusive figures. Their first attempt at an exclusive was included in a four-pack, which contained Nappa, Raditz, Garlic Jr., and what was supposed to be an "exclusive" Master Roshi figure. However, when this four-pack, sold only in Musicland-brand stores, hit shelves, the exclusive figure was exactly the same as the regular retail figure. In essence, the only thing that made this figure special was the sticker on the box that said "Exclusive Master Roshi Figure". Irwin had intended to include a version of Master Roshi in his orange jacket, but somewhere in the course of production, the standard Roshi figures were put in the packs instead. Irwin corrected this error, and orange-jacketed Roshi figures began showing up after a month. In an ironic twist, however, the black-jacket version of the four-pack, being a mistake, is much more rare, and thus more valuable on the secondary market. Also, a few of these orange-jacketed Roshi figures made their way, individually packed, to certain KB Toys stores (and are a rare find indeed).

Exclusive Paint Variants

Irwin's next exclusives were produced for inclusion with their line of figure vehicles. Gold-haired versions of Series 4 Goku and Gohan were included with the Sky-Bike and Jet Momonga, and a version of Series 3 Future Trunks with metallic clothing was included with the Time Capsule.

Electronics Boutique has released two exclusive Irwin repaints, with a third on the way. The first two, Super Saiyan Vegeta and Teen Trunks from Series 5, have gold-painted hair. The gold hair definitely improves upon the original Vegeta figure, but is puzzling on the Trunks figure, because this version of Trunks is not a Super Saiyan! Collectors have come to call this figure "Mid-Transformation Trunks", in order to explain why this figure was released with gold hair.

The third Electronics Boutique exclusive figure was scheduled to be an exclusive version of Super Saiyan Goku from Series 6. However, this figure had a mix-up similar to the intended Roshi exclusive: the figure EB received as an "exclusive variant" is exactly the same as the standard figure. Irwin is currently working to correct this problem;

the proper figure has golden hair, like the series 5 EB exclusives. However, the incorrect version will probably not rise in value like the four-pack. If you decided to keep your figure packaged, you're in luck, because you'll be able to exchange it for the correct version when it's released.

Irwin has also produced two exclusive figures for Beckett Dragon Ball Z Collector. These include "metallic" versions of Series 5 Teen Trunks, and Series 6 Perfect Cell. The Trunks figure has metallic silver hair, and the Cell figure's non-flesh areas contain metallic paints. The Perfect Cell variant also comes with a metallic Cell Junior figure. The Teen Trunks figure, which sold out almost immediately, was available only with new subscriptions. The Perfect Cell figure, which is now sold out was available with new subscriptions or as an individual piece.

Irwin continued the "metallic" variant trend with three other figures from Series 6: SS Goku, Android 16, and SS Trunks. Each figure comes with the same "metallic" finish on their outfits that the Cell figure has on his armor. These figures are available only through Funimation's Z-Store at <http://www.zstore.com>.

Hair Variant

And finally, the last variant from Irwin is the product of a working change made in Series 7. The first runs of Majin Vegeta were incorrectly produced with black hair (this is incorrect because Vegeta is always a Super Saiyan after he becomes possessed by Babidi). Irwin is changing the figure in the middle of the run to have yellow hair, a process which may necessitate changing the packaging art as well, since the back of the card has the black-haired version on it. This mid-run change will make the black-haired version much more collectable, and probably worth more on the secondary market, though only time will tell.

Special IF Labs Variants

IF Labs also has some variants up their sleeves. When their first series of 9-inch Dragon Ball Z figures were released, the first to hit store shelves had stickers on them that said "Specialty Edition Paint". It turns out that each of the four figures has a specialty version, and a mass-market version. The standard edition Piccolo will have less dust and blood than the specialty edition. Also, the standard version will have the thin red lines around the eyes, while the specialty edition won't. On the Goku figure, the colors will have a slightly more faded look on the standard edition than the specialty edition, giving the specialty edition a much richer look, color-wise. On the Lord Slug figure, the standard edition will have a darker cape, with a deeper maroon underneath than the specialty edition. And finally, the most obvious difference is that between the standard and specialty Cooler figures; the special edition has metallic silver armor, which is simply stunning, while the standard edition will have white/bone colored armor, which is more in-tune with the character from the movie.

IF Labs is contemplating whether to continue this trend with all the Dragon Ball lines.

It would give specialty retailers a better way to compete with mass-market chains

(who buy more and can thus sell for less). However, whether or not there will be future variants for IF Labs remains to be seen.

Points To Ponder

Variants and exclusives are a part of just about any toy line these days. They are a way for toy companies to make the hobby a bit more exciting for older collectors, who have money to buy all these different figures, and they are also a way to keep store shelves from becoming stale with the same product. Irwin's future "exclusives" will mainly be store-based exclusives, as they have done in the past, but who's to say if there's not another Majin Vegeta-type variant-producing error on the horizon? Whatever way they decide to go, you should always keep your eyes peeled for things that appear out of the ordinary—perhaps you can be the one to identify the next variant figure. ★

DBZ ONLINE

By Ron Evry

Making Them Move!

Not too many years ago, creating clay figures or puppet animations was an expensive, time-consuming process. A camera needed to be mounted; figures to be animated (moved carefully and slowly), and the film would be shot one or two frames at a time. Now we have come to an age where anyone can create figure animation easily and cheaply, using a special technique that is actually fun to do!

To show how easily this can be done, I created a very short animated film using DBZ action figures, and posted it on the Internet for anyone to see (if I can do this, then probably anyone can). I used two sets of figures for this little experiment. The first was Irwin Toy's Perfect Cell with Cell Junior (a Beckett exclusive!) and their Secret Saiyan Warriors Goku and Super Saiyan Goku combination pack.

Noticing that the figures didn't stand up all by themselves very easily, I realized they would need to be set in clay, mud, or some sort of substance that would hold them up well. So during a freak January heat wave, I visited a ski resort in Pennsylvania covered with artificial snow, and filmed the raw footage for the weirdest Dragon Ball battle ever!

Basically, the filming technique works like this: you put a video camera (digital video works best) on a small tripod, aim it at the figures, and then start shooting. Every few seconds, reach down and move the figures slightly, then pull your hands away from the camera's view. Do this over and over, until your entire scene is shot.

The next step is to feed the footage you have shot into a computer. I used a Macintosh for my project, since every Mac comes with a free video editing program called iMovie. If you don't have a Mac available for your own animation project, perhaps there's one you can use at school or from a friend. There are a number of Windows video editors as well. A shareware product called ProVideo is available to download for a free 14-day trial at <http://www.digisoftdirect.com/>.

Once I brought my video footage into the computer, I proceeded to snip out anything that showed my hands moving the figures around. Everything that was left over was a raw animated film. The next thing was to take any shot that was more than half a second or so and trim it down. Snip - snip - snip!

One place in the film had a "special effect." I replaced the Super Saiyan Goku figure with the smaller regular Goku figure (he's supposed to fit inside the larger figure), and I had shot a little bit with neither figure in between. I put all three shots together: SS Goku, no figure, and small Goku, and used one of iMovie's built-in transitions called an "overlapping fade." This made it look like one figure was magically becoming the other.

I now had about thirty seconds worth of animation, and everything looked pretty good. The only problem was that the action seemed a bit slow on screen. So I used iMovie's "speedup" command on every shot except the transition to make the film go faster. Now it was sixteen seconds long and only needed some sound added. I could have recorded dialogue with a microphone, but instead chose to add music. I was given some instrumental music to use by the rock band Self-Titled (<http://www.self-titled.com>) and I edited in sixteen seconds worth that went pretty well with the action. Then I added a title and a fade out, and the film was complete.

The film was transferred back to videotape so I could show it to friends, then I exported the file as a QuickTime movie and uploaded it to a web page. You can see the entire 16-second long film called "Battle in the Snow" at <http://www.ronevry.com/snowbat.mov>. You will need the QuickTime plug-in in your browser, which is available as a free download from <http://www.quicktime.com>.

Of course, I would love to write about your Dragon Ball animations on the web, whether you do them with figures, drawings, or whatever else you can think of (not to be missed is Brickfilms at <http://www.brickfilms.com/directory.html> showing some cool things you can do with Legos). If you put them on the web, please send me the URL at revry@panix.com.

Duel Monsters Starter set from Japan.

A reprinted version of this set was also produced called EX-R. Both sets have identical cards except the Reprint added two more. The way to tell the difference is to look for a card number on the card. If a card number is shown on the card (ex: EX-01) then that card is from the Reprint set. The original set was unnumbered.

The Yu-Gi-Oh Episode Review

The challenges await Yugi and his friends as they battle top opponents of the Duel Monsters card games.

Imagine Yugi's shock when Pegasus' stooge Kimo brings none other than Seto Kaiba in as a challenger. The stakes are more than a few star chips this time, as Kimo is holding Kaiba's younger brother Mokuba in his clutches.

It's a safe bet this is Yugi's greatest challenge yet, but even bigger are on the way.

Episode #109: Duel With A Ghoul

Kimo has another shocker up his sleeve. He says Kaiba died escaping Pegasus' hospitality! The creature Yugi is facing is a ghoul! To top it off the ghoul is using Kaiba's Blue-Eyes White Dragon deck and knows that Weevil Underwood threw Yugi's Exodia cards in the ocean.

Things are never as it seems. Kaiba isn't dead at all. He escaped and has evaded the goons Pegasus have sent after him. Now he's back in his house and his secret computer room. He's even managed to hack his way into the Industrial Illusion computer system and is now monitoring the duel between Yugi and this doppelganger.

Kaiba now sees a way to get his revenge against Pegasus. But will Kaiba's scheme help Yugi and Mokuba?

Featured Card: Defense Paralysis

This Trap card makes monsters incapable of defending themselves. It can truly turn a game around.

Episode #110: Give Up The Ghost

The duel between Yugi and the fake Kaiba continues. As for the real Kaiba—let's call him Seto—is still monitoring the duel from his home computer system.

At one point, it looks like the fake is about to win, but Seto uploads a virus that weakens all monsters. It's just enough for Yugi to destroy a Blue-Eyes White Dragon. No one has time to celebrate though. Pegasus counters Seto with a virus of his own. If that isn't enough Pegasus goons break into Seto's house. The reformed adversary barely escapes again.

Both Yugi and the fake Kaiba have barely 200 points left. Who wins and Mokuba's fate is now totally up to the next cards Yugi draws.

Featured Card: Magical Hats

This Magic card is the Dueling monster equivalent of Three-Card Monte. The difference is pick the wrong hat and you can spring a truly nasty Trap.

Episode #111: The Dueling Monkey

Walking through the woods, Yugi and his pals discover some rare cards on the ground. Tristan and Joey dive for them, with Tristan getting a Lava Battle God as part of the booty. When Joey notes it's the exact opposite of his Swamp Battle God, Tristan puts the card in his friend's deck.

Meanwhile Mai Valentine is bored out of her skull. Since her battle with Joey she's won eight star chips. She's confronted by Rex Raptor, who's still bruising over how she beat him on the cruise to the Duelist Kingdom. When Raptor challenges Mai, she says she'll accept the rematch on one condition. Raptor must defeat the only person who beat her: Joey! To make matters more interesting, she then suckers Joey into accepting the challenge. The kicker is if Joey gets even the slightest coaching from Yugi, Raptor wins. It looks like the cards are stacked against Joey.

Featured Cards: Lava Battle God/Swamp Battle God

The stats on the Swamp monster are 1800/1550. The Lava monster's stats are 1550/1800. Get them on the field at same time and they combine scores. They can even overcome Trap cards together.

Episode #112: Trial By Red Eyes

After Joey's match with Raptor, the gang again take time to traipse the woods of the Duelist Kingdom. The only thing is Yugi, Tristan, Joey and even Tea are all starving. To make matters even more dire is Mai meets up with them with a knapsack full of food.

Mai strikes a deal, she'll hand over the food if Yugi, Joey and Tristan will forage wood and water and cook the food. Mai then attempts to drive a wedge between Tea and the rest. It fails completely. Frustrated, Mai now takes her own walk in the woods.

A pair of hands loom out of the dark and grab her.

Meanwhile, our heroes are shocked when their schoolmate Bakura appears out of the woods. Each kid discusses their favorite monster card. Bakura then challenges Yugi to a "friendly" duel, with the proviso each of our heroes puts their fave card in Yugi's deck. You know it's another trap, and before they know it all four are sent off to the Shadow Realm.

Featured Card: The Red-Eyes Black Dragon

The compliment to the Blue-Eyes White Dragon. This monster isn't quite as powerful as its white counterpart, but at 2400/2000 it's no slouch either.

So what is Bakura's plan? Can Yugi and company get out of the Shadow Realm? We'll have to wait for the next column to find out. ★
